That Famous Waimea Game.

On Sunday, Sept. 25th, the boys from the Parker Ranch and a pick-up nine played a thrilling game of baseball, which resulted in a score of 27 to 6 in favor of the ranchmen. There was included in the visiting nine, players from Hamakua, Hilo and Olaa, and Zambloch the Elks pitcher assisted. There are several versions of the cause of the ignominious defeat, some attributing the score to Zambloch's bad pitching, while others claim his balls were too swift. Jack Vanatta gives the most plausible reason, alleging that the visiting nine had not practiced and were on strange grounds. In an open letter to the Bulletin of recent date, he says:

"I see in your columns that the crack players of Hilo were included in the nine. I wish to contradict the statement as there was no such thing. We players from Hilo wish to extend our appreciation to Waimea for being called the crack players of the Rainy City, but we do not consider ourselves as such and cannot accept the honor Waimea has bestowed upon us.

Now in conclusion I wish to say that if Waimea would like to have a game with the crack players of Hilo, they can have it at any time convenient. I'll promise that they will give them a run for their money. Will play for anything down to a marble. Waimea, don't crow too early.

VANNATTA.

A Juvenile Globe Trotter.

Commodore Jack, the 14 year old son of Agent R. T. Guard of the Matson Line was a returning passenger on the S. S. Enterprise. In May last Jack was the guest of Capt. Barron of the American-Hawaiian steamer American took a voyage to New York, traversing the 14,000 miles of ocean in safety. The young traveler's experience was written up in the New York and Philadelphia papers, and after a brief stay with an Uncle in the New York metropolis, the young man was put aboard a train and went to the St. Louis Fair. He made the journey overland alone to San Francisco where he met Capt. Wm. Matson, his god-father, who gave him the best accommodations that the good steamer Enterprise afforded, and after journeying with the vessel to Honolulu, landed in Hilo Saturday morning, a much traveled youth. Jack talks entertainingly of his trip and delights to entertain his boy friends, as well as his elders, with accounts of his travels.
